

Decision making in end of life care

At some stage of critical illness, meaningful recovery may not be possible even after aggressive organ support and treatment in ICU. ICU physician need to make the decision to continue or limit the therapy. Substituted and shared decision making are frequently adopted by us. Concept of these decision making processes and the practice of end of life care in the ICUs in Hong Kong will be reviewed.